I joined St. Lukes School when I was running a youth programme across the St. Albans district and wanted work more closely with local schools.

My passion for special needs grew when I volunteered for a disability arts programme during my teenage years. Since then I have trained as a youth practitioner and have worked with many schools/colleges across the UK (and internationally at one point!).

My university background is in arts education and I now work to help young people become more ready for the world of work. My knowledge and skills for this role lies within safeguarding, safer recruitment and teaching/learning.

St. Lukes School is one that I have cared about since I first ever walked through the gates and saw just how much the students can and will develop from being in the school environment.
